

March was Women’s History Month, and we were busy proudly celebrating! Each and every day we are especially grateful for our female employees who are addressing the world’s most challenging problems. The glass ceiling is breaking, and women are being recognized as colleagues, teammates, and leaders in innovation.

Speaking of courageous female leaders... last month we also welcomed Maureen Waterston as our new chief human resources officer (CHRO). She is responsible for our human capital strategy, including growing our ability to hire, develop, and retain top talent while shaping an industry-leading employee experience at Leidos. She will also champion Leidos Life, our renewed commitment to our employees’ career, flexibility, and well-being.

Rally for a better future with us. Check out our current job openings and consider rejoining Leidos today!

---

Why this Leidos alumna is happy to return—For good

Sandra Walker, a project manager and former legacy SAIC employee, has rejoined Leidos. Click here to read why she came back after three decades and her plans to stay until retirement.

A senior developer's advice on how to grow your tech career

Pooja Khardor says that the Gigs Program makes Leidos an employer of choice for senior developers and Scrum Masters. Gigs are short-term opportunities across the enterprise that allow developers to learn and practice a new technology while also earning some extra money. Read more on how you can grow your tech career at Leidos.

---

NASCAR's Bubba Wallace and Leidos- Driving diversity and inclusion

"I'm pumped to partner with Leidos again. We had a great partnership when I was running Xfinity and to now have them on board our No. 23 Camry TRD and continue supporting my career and what we are doing both on and off the racetrack at 23XI is really a cool thing for me." Read more about how we are accelerating change with Bubba Wallace.

